Hi folks, it's that GUV time again but before I get my preach on, here's a little tale from Africa!

Morocco Mole

This article has nothing to do with Secret Squirrel and everything to do with another mini-break that we took to Algeciras in the south of Spain. As well as being able to visit Fede and Olga, a couple of friends that we have there, Algeciras is a great base for getting to cool places like Gibraltar and Morocco. Gibraltar is always good for a visit because it's like being in England but with good weather! They even have a Morrison's there, which came handy for getting stocked up on tea and baked beans! However, Morocco was even better because we got a deal with the ferry company to take us on a fun-packed day trip to Tangier, involving a bus tour of the royal palaces, camel rides, a typical Moroccan meal with music and a visit to the castle and market where we saw traditional weaving and herbal medicine. However, it was a bit sad to think that there are so few Christians in this country, especially with it being so close by so we are determined to do something about it (even it only makes a small difference). We've already thought of some plans so watch this space!

The 7th commandment

For the last few weeks we have been enjoying a series of sermons at Mountainview based on the 10 commandments. As luck would have it, I was asked to speak on one of them, although it ended up being a bit more than I bargained for because it was the 7th commandment. Those of you familiar with Exodus 20 will be smiling now. For the rest of you it's "You shall not commit adultery"! Obviously, I don't have any personal experience if this but I have seen how it has destroyed families so I was happy to talk about the subject, especially because I was being helped by J. John's book "Just 10", which I would definitely recommend for anyone that would like to take a fresh look at these time honoured laws.

Prayer Points

- ✓ That Morocco would be more open to the gospel and that the underground church would grow.
- ✓ That the series on the 10 commandments would help us all to live a life pleasing to God.

That's all folks, I look forward to seeing you again next month!

God bless, Sam 😊
